List of uses:

Woods lamp : Ultra violet light to check for skin conditions such as ring worm

Scourban: Anti diarrhoea medicine. Tastes bad! But works.

Chromycetin: very mild eye ointment for most eye infections. Very soothing and can be used in young animals

Amoxil, Clavulox ( combination Amoxicillin and Clavulanic acid) Zithromax and Rilixen are all broad spectrum anti-biotics.

Skin and ear cleaning fluids : there are a number on the market and most are available from pet shops.

Sandoz Calcium syrup : Is a very quickly absorbed calcium supplement . Can be given to queens directly after birthing and will help minimise the likelihood of developing eclampsia. And giving a drop once a day, from a day after birth to kittens will strengthen them and help them feed better.

Bone grow: Is a calcium supplement for adding to food. It is important to remember that when giving a calcium supplement , CALCIUM CARBONATE is the best form to use. But if they are eating chicken necks etc it should not be needed.

Surolan: is a treatment for ear infection, but it also has anti-fungal action and can be used to treat ring worm/

Liquid paraffin : used for fur balls and constipation.

Triocil: A anti bacterial anti fungal shampoo

Folate and Ilycine: have excellent anti viral properties and help maintain the immune system.

Grisoven: is a internal anti-fungal

Sporonox: is also internal either a liquid or capsules

Periactin: Is a human antihistamine, that has a mild calming action on cats. Useful for calling queens and nervous cats at shows.

Oxytocin: A hormone injection used in the aid of birthing. The usual dose for a adult queen is .5ml every 4 hours. But up to 1ml is fine . I never give a queen a “needle” having a large litter until she has delivered at least one kitten as it may put to much strain on the uterus, as it is under a lot of internal pressure. In this case always call the vet before giving the drug. It can also be used near the end when things slow down and mum is tired ,to help her get finished or if it is suspected a placenta is not delivered . And after just to make sure everything is settled down and she is all done.

Junket tablets: This is a old fashioned but useful remedy for diarrhoea. Especially for kittens.
